MARKET COMMENTS

Portfolio performance was relatively flat in November, as markets took a breather from the strong returns of recent months. Global equities returned -0.5%, as bonds fared similarly, -0.6% in GBP terms. Beneath a calm surface, we observed a remarkable rotation as sectors with more certain cashflows outperformed technology and sectors with greater dependence on the strength of the overall economy – a significant reversal of the trend observed since the recovery in May. Markets were influenced by growing concerns about the elevated valuations of technology and AI-related stocks, which prompted this shift towards more defensive, previously unloved, sectors like healthcare and consumer staples, while tech-oriented names faced broader pullbacks.

Strong earnings and revenue beats failed to ignite another leg up in the US market (-0.8%), indicating that investor’s expectations are sky-high. Excellent earnings by AI-chipmaker Nvidia provided temporarily relief, however valuations fears and overly optimistic profit expectation worries surrounding the AI ecosystem drove sentiment. Despite weeks of intense speculation, the UK budget was largely uneventful. Greater fiscal headroom and lower projected gilt issuance helped to stabilise markets. UK equities (+0.5%) edged higher as a weaker pound supported globally oriented companies and softer inflation data increased future rate cut expectations. Europe (+0.7%) was the month’s top performing region, thanks to limited AI exposure and strength in financials and healthcare. Performance diverged across emerging markets (-3.2%). Technology-heavy markets (Korea -7.9%, (Taiwan -5%), which have risen sharply this year, suffered losses. Indian equities (+1.7%) outperformed the broader region due to lower AI exposure, policy stability and easing inflation. The top performing emerging region was Latin America (+5.2%), which surged on strong commodity prices and currency gains.
